Macro-perspectives on African growth, resilience and trade – geopolitical conflict, inflationary pressures and trade volatility

On the heels of both the pandemic and geopolitical conflict, the African continent has been wrangling with internal and external challenges, from disruption to supply chains and lending appetite to the impact of 'imported' inflation and rising interest rates. With risks growing around food security, commodity supplies and credit access, what priorities must governments, lenders and businesses consider to mitigate pain points across Sub-Saharan Africa?

This macroeconomic overview will consider economic headwinds in the region ranging from illiquid hard currency and retreating access to trade credit, rising inflation, commodity market volatility and food security risks. Shoring up supply chain stability will also be considered, offering perspectives on the key investment flows and financing sources expected to play a role in protecting and expanding African trade.

Robert Besseling, Chief Executive Officer & Founder, Pangea-Risk

Rt Hon. Jim Murphy, Managing Director, Arden Strategies

09.45-10.35

Plugging the continent's trade finance gap – addressing barriers to credit access

Africa remains at the sharp end of the growing trade finance gap, with local banks and businesses often too familiar with high business rates and hurdles to credit borrowing and market access. Identifying African corporates' needs for simple and readily deployable trade liquidity, an expert panel will pinpoint the steps banks and other financiers can take to meet the continent's needs, addressing policy and technical barriers for African borrowers.

Set against a backdrop of hard currency liquidity shortages, this debate will consider the key financing players, sources and structures that can provide local banks and corporates with crucial trade financing. Further discussion will explore the innovations aimed at overcoming regulatory and due-diligence challenges, and the digital tools and alternative financing providers capable of channeling trade liquidity deeper into African supply chains.

Progress on the AfCFTA – getting regulation over the line and digital savings to trade and logistics

Although the African Continental Free Trade Area (AfCFTA) officially commenced on January 1 2021, exercising tariff-free and low-barrier trade remains difficult, with a functioning single market beholden to the pace of ongoing policy and regulatory negotiations. With the initiative representing wide potential benefits to African trade and reducing exposure to international disruption, what priorities should lenders, policymakers and industry work towards for accelerating agreement delivery, and ensure the AfCFTA can grow and de-risk intra-African trade and finance?

Options for overcoming key legislative challenges like goods and services, investment rules and standardisation will be considered, including the issue of rolling out implementation across African markets and economies. Actions to cooperate with financiers and address logistical hurdles will centre around developing transport and border infrastructure, and delivering tools to improve cost and trade processing efficiencies. The session will also consider what adjacent innovations like the Pan African Payment & Settlement System (PAPSS) might represent for growing intra-African currency exchange and numbing US dollar liquidity crunches will also be explored.

Moderator: Professor David Luke, Professor in Practice and Strategic Director, Firoz Lalji Institute for Africa, London School of Economics

Africa and the commodity rush – balancing international appetite with domestic production priorities

Despite the continent's breadth of space and arable land, African markets have been widely exposed to global shocks in commodity prices, with many nations dependent on imports of agricultural goods and commodities. With attention increasingly paid to scaling domestic production and self-reliance, what priorities must governments, development agencies, financiers and industry take to alleviate price pressures and develop stable systems for African agriculture production and food security in the longer-term?

Conversation will also focus on what roles trade finance and long-term development funding can play in supporting regional import substitution will be considered, such as creating and strengthening domestic agribusiness value-chains, meeting working capital needs and developing infrastructure for intra-African trade. The session will also examine the scope for technical solutions, including digital exchanges for producers, buyers, and sellers, and new markets for trade credit services.

11.15-12.00

Levelling the playing field – ECA competitors and disruptors, and embedding sustainable finance

Activity in Africa's export credit market has been on the move in recent years, with flurries of ECA-backed infrastructure finance secured across Africa and with the interplay between different ECAs and the issue of embedding sustainability within the sector emerging as key trends. What measures can ECAs take to compete globally whilst avoiding a 'race to the bottom' in terms of both financing and standards, to ensure sustainable export finance fully supports African development goals?

This session will assess the options for levelling the ECA playing field across Africa, including the delivery of loans and guarantees that compete with foreign counterparts and assign fairer debt obligation and repayment conditions to African borrowers. Discussion on the future of long-term infrastructure and sustainable finance will centre around risk reduction options, gearing ECAs towards delivery of government climate objectives and making finance conditions for socially impactful projects attractive to African markets and lenders.

Moderator: Chris Mitman, Head of Export & Agency Finance, Investec Bank

Ram Shalita, Chief Executive Officer, Partner, Bluebird Finance & Projects

Jan Glaser, Vice-President, Power & Environment, KFW IPEX Bank

Michael Creighton, Executive Director, Credit & Political Risks, WTW

12.00-12.45

Managing risks and distress – African debt sustainability and concessional finance

Exacerbated by the pandemic, geopolitical conflict and inflation-based volatility, sovereign debt levels have been increasing across multiple African economies, with risks around debt distress, defaulting and unsustainability rising. With the added challenges this presents to accessing finance and a nation's risk profile, how can tools to stem growing debt threats be expedited? What might upward trends in debt mean for infrastructure development and the role of concessional finance?

Discussion will consider options for managing and protecting sovereign debt profiles, including debt servicing and stabilisation measures, reducing risk through trade and revenue diversification and boosting value-added industry and job growth. Wider tools for mitigating African political and economic risks will also be assessed. With debt thresholds prohibiting further borrowing, infrastructure funding options will centre around blending products with concessional and grant-based funding, and securing export creditor finance for long-term projects.

Remember the 'S' in ESG – making sustainable trade finance appropriate to Africa

As the global sustainability agenda expands to include trade and trade finance, tensions are rising over the global focus on decarbonization at the expense of wider environmental and social impacts. Concern is also growing around ESG standards for trade finance which fail to take into account the realities of trade in Africa, and could make Africa's trade finance gap worse, especially for Africa's SME traders.

In this special session, members of ITFA's Africa Regional Committee will discuss the issues, findings and calls to action of its White Paper on sustainable trade finance standards and African trade, which is publishing to coincide with COP27 in Egypt. How can help be provided to African traders transitioning to more sustainable models and in the process ensure that there is a just transition, where the 'S' in ESG is not ignored and where SME's access to trade finance is improved?

Moderator: Duarte Pedreira, Board Member, International Trade & Forfaiting Association (ITFA); Head of Emerging & Frontier Markets, Crown Agents Bank

George Wilson, Head of Institutional Trade Finance, Investec

Charging-up African fintech – digital hoops and overcoming obstacles

With mobile banking prolific across Africa and adoption helping to narrow the gap in unbanked service users, the future for the continent's fintech and payment ecosystem looks bright. Despite this optimism, there remain barriers to further inclusion, including outdated regulation and legal frameworks, and systemic challenges around client data and information requirements. How can digital trade finance services be further developed to democratise Africa, and what role can solutions play in simplifying due diligence processes?

This conversation will focus on digitisation as a vector, the scope for financial inclusion in areas like bank accounts and credit services, and how traditional finance and African fintech can best collaborate on service deployment, reducing barriers to entry for financiers and borrowers alike. It will also consider the steps African regulators can take over trade rule-design, as well as expanding data initiatives such as KYC, simplifying client documentation, minimising fraud risks and reducing compliance and rate costs.

Stretching the limits – trade and political risk insurance in times of increased volatility

Evolving threats like rising inflation, commodity pressures, implications of the Ukraine conflict and ongoing debt sustainability concerns magnify the role that the trade credit and political risk insurance market has to play across Sub-Saharan Africa, with the expansion of these threats stretching the capacity and risk appetite of insurers, and with the risks of unfulfillable short and long term trade credit deals increasing in turn.

This session will examine these threats front and centre, including rising non-payment risk, social unrest, currency volatility and illiquidity, and long-term structural adjustments across key sectors such as energy and agribusiness. Potential de-risking solutions will also be assessed, considering what can be learned from pandemic-era solutions to meeting trade credit needs, tapping in to growth markets, and factoring in greater political risk levels. Discussion will also ask if private insurers have the capacity to meet demand, and how this might be grown to address new challenges.

Sam Evans, Director, Political Risks & Trade Credit, BPL Global

Genevieve Ahinful, Head, Political Risk Insurance & Trade Credit, Africa Specialty Risks

In the past and to the future – growing African resilience to seize future opportunities

The events of the past few years have seen a number of key lessons learned regarding the efficient deployment of operational and logistical measures, inter-regional collaboration, and the development of continent-wide resilience across African supply chains.

With new and old pressure-points exacerbated by the Ukraine conflict, subsequent inflationary pressures and forecasted global economic downturn, this closing session will consider the role governments, FIs, corporates and export credit agencies in allocating the necessary resources to achieve inclusive social and economic resilience. Talking points will include changes in bank appetites (local and international), tax, legal and labour regulations (including local content), and the increasingly significant role of ECAs as countercyclical actors tasked with providing support and facilitating economic growth.
